

The Triomphe de la République statue is engulfed during a massive show of international support for the victims of last week's terror attacks, "Paris in the capital of the world today," said President Hollande.

United we stand

● 46 world leaders join millions on solidarity marches ● Gunman's widow flees to join Islamic State in Syria

Ben Macintyre
Paris

Charles, the indomitable symbol of French resistance to terrorism, took to the streets of Paris yesterday as more than a million people marched together in an astonishing display of national and international unity in response to last week's brutal attacks.

On a day of bright sunshine and drifting rain, this unique event was part mourning, part defiance and, above all, an outpouring of support for the threatened values of the French Republic.

"Now comes Charles," chanted the crowd that assembled in the Place de la République — a place that has become a national expression of solidarity with the 17 victims of the attacks on the satirical magazine Charlie Hebdo and a Jewish supermarket.

The anti-terrorism march, led by world leaders including David Cameron and relatives of victims, was the largest protest demonstration in French soil. Long after the first marchers reached Place de la Nation, thousands more were still converging on the starting point, turning Boulevard Voltaire into a vast sea of humanity.

In addition to the huge crowds thronging the streets of Paris, 17 million people attended marches across the country.

No nation puts on a street demonstration quite like France. The right to march is practically enshrined in the constitution. But yesterday's mass gathering was of a scale and intensity the country has never seen before, a mass rally of every creed, political complexion, colour, age and race, a precise cross-section of French society.

At times the "march for history" had the air of a grandly defiant carnival, a public display of patriotic resilience and national cohesion, at once loud, proud and angry. The same words were repeated again and again, on hand-held signs, T-shirts and umbrellas. "It was Charles".

The Frenchman had even memorised the words, with a dose of irony, on to the back of a blue silk jacket.

As they crumpled into the gaps and clustered over the next street dedicated to the Republic, the demonstrators chanted, raised the tricolour (and the French and European flags), sang La Marseillaise and invoked, repeatedly, a French President without a face who has become a sort of fall hero, a symbol of opposition to terrorism, fundamentalism and authoritarian Charles.

The victims' attacks by French-born Islamist terrorists have provoked a reaction of intense national solidarity and a brief cessation of all other hostilities. President Hollande marched along with Nicolas Sarkozy, the man he replaced as the US's, both Mohamed El-Baradei, the Palestinian leader, and Benjamin Netanyahu, the Israeli prime minister, attended the mass rally. President Kalla of Mali, whose the gunman Amadou Coulibaly was born, was in the front row.

"Paris is the capital of the world today," Mr Hollande declared. "The whole country will rise up."

Among the hosts of Europe present at the highly charged gathering were: Iraq's Abadi, of Germany, as well as Doree Paraschiv, Matteo Renzi and Mariano Rajoy, the leaders of Ukraine, Italy and Spain. All of the mainstream French political groups were represented, although the far-right National Front, claiming it had been "excluded", opted to take part in regional rallies instead.

French politicians who had once left the national faith of Charles 16th's new march as its defence, as the magazine proposed a "serious issue" edition of one million copies to be published on Wednesday.

"I am here to defend the values of the French Republic; this is about liberty and freedom of expression," said André Chassaigne, a Personne Sans Visa member, whose the supermarket sign in which her people had took place. "We have to make a stand." In British news, cover of Continued on page 2, 101-1

International New York Times

MONDAY, JANUARY 12, 2015

With bonds forged in jail, jihadist cell roared back

Paris network, broken up in 2005, is tied to acts from Midwest to Europe

BY NICHOLAS...

They suggest a plot to attack the... along the city lanes and... of the... (The group... Paris... in 2005... Midwest to Europe...)

The world stands with France

Protest demonstrators in Paris today... The banner... (The world stands with France...)

Corrosion in Paris in a display of unity after terrorist attacks

BY LUCY K...

Thousands of thousands of people... (Paris in a display of unity...)

modern French history... (Paris in a display of unity...)

President François Hollande... (The world stands with France...)

On video, attacker pledges loyalty to ISIS

BY JENNIFER...

London... (On video, attacker pledges loyalty to ISIS...)

London... (On video, attacker pledges loyalty to ISIS...)

Paris... (On video, attacker pledges loyalty to ISIS...)

Hollande wins praise in crisis, but warm feelings may not last

BY STEVE...

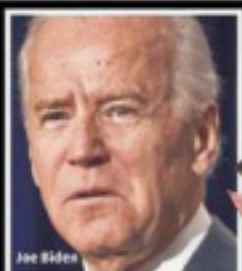

Paris... (Hollande wins praise in crisis, but warm feelings may not last...)

Paris... (Hollande wins praise in crisis, but warm feelings may not last...)

DAILY NEWS

NEW YORK'S HOMETOWN NEWSPAPER

Sunday, more than 40 leaders marched with 3M people in Paris to defy terror. None of these men showed up. THE NEWS SAYS:

SEE PAGES 4-5

You let the world down

THE Sun

JUST 40p

TORY'S CALL TO MUSLIMS

Kelvin MacKenzie

By TOM NEWTON DUNN
MUSLIMS must do more to build bridges, says a Cabinet minister.
Said Iqbal, who was born a Muslim, urged Islamic communities across the UK to stop being divisive at school.
Full Story on Page 16 and 17

The UK is on the edge and only needs a slight push

SEE PAGE 13

Monday, January 12, 2015

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER

thesun.co.uk

- Paris and world's tribute to dead
- United in fight against terrorists

JE SUIS 4 MILLION

Celebs
HOLS
FROM £9.50

BOOK TODAY
TOKEN 10: PAGE 22

CBB EXCLUSIVE

My groping ex Jeremy is a timebomb
SEE PAGE 9

MAN UTD HAVE NO SHOTS ON TARGET

Gaal farce
MAN UTD: 0 SOUTH: 1-SEE SUNSPORT

By SAM CHRISTIE
A VAST sea of citizens march through Paris yesterday — as four million people across France paid a defiant public tribute to the 17 innocents murdered by Islamic terrorists.
Hundreds of these tanks were joined across worldwide in memory of them.
Continued on Page 4

WE ARE THE WORLD: PAGES 4 & 5 ● STAND UP, MUSLIMS: PAGES 6 & 7

£6.00 (IR £1.30)
 Monday 13.01.15
 Published in London and Manchester
 theguardian.com

Newspaper of the year
 Winner of the Pulitzer prize

the guardian

A nation united against terror

This was about restating what is best in Europe, says Natalie Nougayrède in Paris, as well as overcoming barbarism and xenophobia

After the shock and the horror came the time for collective revival. The one in France can recall anything like this in their lifetime. The streets of Paris at the time of the liberation as they come to life. There, as now, we as a nation were desperate to confirm who we are, who we want to be, how it should be, how it should survive, how it would overcome barbarism and aggression, as well as the country's failures and divisions.

Up to 2 million people poured on to the streets of Paris – and an estimated 3 million across France – in a demonstration of unity against terror and its defence of values that are at the heart of democracy, and at the heart of Europe. Paris was determined and emotional.

And how had things like this ever, including before in France, so that every generation may take part in this moment of history in the making. It the compact, when it came, people felt the need to speak about their differences, ethnic, religious and social backgrounds while holding signs that said "Innocence, freedom, republic", almost as if proving that goodness could never be victorious in dividing a nation, not to mentioning the very essence of European institutions.

My own overwhelming feeling was may this spirit of resistance last. May this be a gripping point of news again. May this stand for the rest of our lifetime. Not only for France, but also for a Europe where we know what to break – however much of a difficulty they may be – are growing, and where people will not accept that we are also on the rise.

But what if it comes to the 11/9/11/9/11, unlike the 11/9/11 occupation, this was not an attack from afar, this was a direct attack on our borders. It was a war on our land that appeared from within France. The financial, industrial, small business who associated it people in Paris were young French nationals. They were born and educated in France. This has never gone a long way to explaining why there was such an outpouring of grief and anger, and the need to reaffirm France's values by a show of government's democratic strength.

Just as important was the presence of many European leaders and officials. It was not only about victims, but about ensuring what Europe is supposed to be about – tolerance, fundamental rights, rule of law. The articles appear with

Angela Merkel and François Hollande (below) in Paris where people held up to 200,000 signs for the victims of the Charlie Hebdo attacks that died by terrorists. Photo by The Associated Press/Charlie Hebdo

“My overwhelming feeling was: may this last. May it be a tipping point of Never Again”

“It was Charlie, it was his, it was his” – this was the best, the strongest and most complete slogan that I ever heard. I saw Charlie, I saw the police, I saw Jewish. The best slogan that I heard. How did we know that, they repeated not only freedom of speech but the right of being Jewish. The Charlie Hebdo cartoon may not have pleased everyone but they were about everything right that the French revolution introduced. Before that, maybe they were a line.

Nothing Charlie Hebdo if ever violated democracy or essential rights in fact, when the critical magazine was possessed by Muslim organizations in France for supposedly insulting Islam and insulting Islam and Muslims at large, the court ruled that the magazine, even if it called for violence, had not gone beyond “the admissible limits of freedom of speech”.

Recently, the cartoon targeted police officers, shooting three dead and wounding many, they attacked those whose mission is to uphold the rule of law. It is an attack on an institution of the republic as much as an individual who was taking their lives as they always had to stop the attacks.

Thinking of Jewish families were for Jews. They connected a mosque inside a kosher shop, and on the day of the attack, making sure there would be many clients at hand. So it happened that so French and French citizens associated Jews just because they were Jewish. It was a tragedy that could only require the memory of second world war heroes. And it came just two years after a bloody antisemitic attack in the French city of Toulouse, where children were shot in a Jewish school.

Beyond justice and proportionality display of unity against terror, questions must be asked: can enough done in recent years, in light back against the triple of terrorism that it pose so society confidence? We have enough solidarity when Charlie Hebdo was criticized.

12 diet questions which will change your life for ever

Take our 1st quiz to find the perfect diet for you Page 24

Magnifique

'They tried to bring France to its knees, instead they brought Europe to its feet'

SOLIDARITY A demonstrator in Trafalgar Square yesterday at a London march in Paris

FACE OF HATE...GUNMAN'S CHILLING VIDEO: PAGES 6&7 FACE OF HOPE...FOUR MILLION MARCH: PAGES 6&9

TOY HORROR STORY

SICK Some, two, and low back to cart with blue back

BY ADAM ASPINALL

HOSPITAL staff are chaining toys to sick children's beds because heartless thieves keep stealing them.

Crooks also swipe games and TVs in beds that cost the NHS about £1,000 a year.

Dear Beppe just might tell how a toy was tied to one Steven out at Royal Gwent Hospital, Newport. He said: "I can't believe this is happening in Britain"

FULL STORY: PAGE 5

Children's games chained to hospital beds to stop despicable thieves

TV PREVIEW ...
THE WEEK'S
BEST PICKS
FROM JULIE
McDOWALL

18

CAROLYN
LECKIE: WHAT A NIGHT IN JAIL TAUGHT ME ABOUT WOMEN'S PRISONS

10

MONDAY, JANUARY 12, 2015

THE NATIONAL

THE NEWSPAPER THAT SUPPORTS AN INDEPENDENT SCOTLAND 50p

PARIS DEFIANT

Liberté, égalité, fraternité

The

INDEPENDENT

MONDAY 12 JANUARY 2015

Matthew Norman

The force that is the TV election debates

WORLD 9.25

Robert Fisk

'Terror lists' have become meaningless

WORLD 9.26

Lois Pryce

The 'Wild' adventurer
inside every woman

SECTION 1 9.21

Alexander Fury

Hit the fashion heights at 35,000 feet

SECTION 1 9.27

Ellen E Jones

Our TV critic on David
Starkey - and Rita Ora

ARTS 9.42

ISSUE NO. 1,000

6146

WWW.INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Liberté, Egalité, Fraternité

The day Paris came together - in defiance of terror, and in celebration of freedom

JOHN LICHFIELD AND KIM SENGUPTA REPORT PAGES 4-6
PLUS PADDY ASHDOWN AND YASMIN ALISHAJ-BROWN

Liberté Solidarité Unité

"Je suis, tu es, nous sommes..." "Charlie"

Bart Eeckhout
loopt mee in Parijs

» 2-3

France elietroepen maakten hun
reputatie waar

» 4

"Pure horror"
Sarah Bitton verstopte
zich met zootje
in koelcel supermarkt

» 6

Dringend Bouwen aan
een Europese Islam

» 10-12 20

TODAY

PHOTOGRAPH

MONDAY, 12 JANUARY 2013

WELLINGTON TIME

EYEBAG REMOVAL SCARLESS
 CALL US 0222 3032
 CHINESE MEDICAL

BUSINESS-24
 'Spore firms well placed to help India attain goals'

Demonstrators waving flags on the march at the centre of the Place de la République before the marchers' departure yesterday.

PLAIS THE CAPITAL OF THE WORLD TODAY, SAYS BOLLARDI

World leaders join huge crowds in Paris anti-terror rally

Meriel, Governor among 44 leaders who led the march under high security

NBS - More than 40 world leaders led off a march yesterday, leading hundreds of thousands of French citizens in an unprecedented march under high security to rally for unity and freedom of expression and to honour 17 victims of three days of terrorist attacks. President Francois Hollande and leaders from Germany, Italy, Israel, Turkey, Britain and the Palestinian territories, among others, moved off from the central Place de la Republique ahead of a sea of French and other flags. Dedicating speeches rang out over the square as the leaders walked past, surrounded by tight security and an atmosphere of vigilance as well as unity, after three gunmen attacked a shopping office, leather equipment and the police last week. Families of the victims, many weeping and embracing, were also at the front of the silent march, which began at the Place de la Republique and headed at the Place de la Nation. CONTINUED ON PAGE 7

New Medisave scheme to help seniors to start in April

PHOTOGRAPH
www.medisave.com.sg

SHANGHAI - Come April, Singaporeans aged 65 and above will be able to top Medisave to further defray their out-of-pocket medical costs when they visit neighbourhood clinics for minor ailments such as the common cold and cough.

First announced during the Ministry of Health's session of Supply Debate last year, the new Plus Medisave scheme will allow senior citizens to top up to $200 a year from their Medisave accounts for outpatient treatment at polyclinics, general practitioner clinics under the Community Health Assist Scheme (CHAS) and Specialist Outpatient Clinics at public hospitals.

While Medisave was designed to help with large hospital bills and its use for outpatient medical expenses has been limited - for certain chronic conditions, for instance - the new scheme will allow seniors to use the monies for conditions such as asthma and thyroid.

Those who do not have enough funds in their Medisave accounts can top their spouses' accounts, provided their partners are also aged 65 and above. Seniors who have exhausted the limits of the current allowed uses of Medisave can also use their Plus Medisave CONTINUED ON PAGE 4

Searchers believe flight QZ8501's black box found

PARANGARAJAPET - Indonesian search teams believe they have located the wreckage of an AirAsia jetliner that crashed in the Java Sea two weeks ago and have reportedly found its black box flight recorders, but could not retrieve them as they were stuck under debris.

Searchers have been hearing grunts, believed to be from the plane's two black boxes near where the tail of the Airbus A320-300 jet was raised on Saturday. Diversary lifting equipment tomorrow will allow them to retrieve the recorders. Indonesian AirAsia flight QZ8501 last contact with air traffic control amid bad weather on the 18,000-hour halfing into an airless flight from the Indonesian city of Surabaya to Singapore. None of the 112 passengers on board survived. By Singapore operations of the National Search and Rescue Agency, yesterday said a search area had revealed an object measuring five by five by 1.5m on the sea floor. "They suspect it is the body of the plane," Mr Supriatno told Reuters in the town of Pangrehlan Bay, the base for the search effort on Sunday. CONTINUED ON PAGE 4